Urinary Incontinence — Take Back Control

Jeffrey Welsch, MD

Incontinence, which is defined as the involuntary loss of urine, is very common in both men and women. There are various ways of treating stress incontinence — one of which is to have a minimally invasive surgery known as a sling procedure. Slings have a high rate of effectiveness and low risk of complications. Please join urologist, Dr. Jeffrey Welsch, for this informational seminar to find out if this procedure is the right way for you to take back control of your life.
